Conditional lethal mutation

Warning: Can only detect less than 5000 charactersproduction of fagotable fagot. However the growth of these mutants can still occur at a lower temperature. These mutants with conditionally lethal TS have been used to identify and characterize the function of many of Phage genes. [8] Therefore the genes used in repairing DNA damage were identified using TS mutants, [9] [10] and genes that influence genetic recombination [11] [12]. For example, example, A TS DNA mutant repair at intermediate temperature will allow a certain progeny to produce. However, if such mutant TS is irradiated with UV light, its survival will be more strongly reduced than the reduction of the irradiated survival Wild-Type Fago T4. Moreover, cold conditional lethal sensitive sensitive capable of growing at high temperatures, but unable to grow at low temperatures, were isolated in fago T4. [13] These cold sensitive independent lethal mutants also defined a series of phago genes. Another class of Laletals Lethes Mutanti Fago T4, called amber mutants, are able to grow on some strains of E. coli, but not on others. [8] These mutants have also been used to identify and characterize the function of many of the phago t4 genes initially. Furthermore, it was found that an amber mutation produces a "nonsense codon" within a gene that causes the interruption of the polypeptide chain during translation. This discovery has provided information in a significant aspect of the genetic code. See also Terminator Gene References ^ Gluecksohn-Waelsch, Salome (1963).
